INVESTIGATION REVEALS CALVES RAISED FOR VEAL BEING “BRUTALIZED” AND STARVED TO DEATH

“It’s surprising that the veal industry, which solely relies on dairy calves to operate, is legally still in existence,” Animal Recovery Mission founder Richard “Kudo” Couto said.

A new undercover investigation released today by animal-rights group Animal Recovery Mission (ARM) found serious animal abuse and neglect at Strauss Veal Feeds—a veal operation that obtains many of its calves from Coca-Cola Company supplier Fairlife Oaks Farms, of the milk company Fairlife Corporation. The footage shows calves from Strauss Veal Feeds being kept in pitch black conditions for up to 18 hours a day with little or no ventilation, even during the summer months, in crates that do not allow them to turn around or go outside. According to investigators, the calves are “brutalized” during transport and violently thrown into the trailer, living in filth and excrement, and dying of starvation. An undercover ARM investigator, who was hired by Strauss Veal Feeds as a calf caregiver, says he witnessed 10 to 20 calves dying daily, many of them suffering from dysentery, ear infections, and stomach viruses. “What the ARM investigator witnessed was shocking and medieval [such as] baby calves living in overheated pitch black barns,” ARM founder Richard “Kudo” Couto said.
