SUMMARY OF INVESTIGATION

The Animal Recovery Mission (ARM) has uncovered severe violations of animal welfare laws at Rainbow Valley Dairy, a key supplier for Coca-Cola's fairlife milk brand. As part of a two-part undercover investigation, systemic cruelty to animals, gross negligence by managers, owners, and employees, and environmental violations were documented, directly implicating fairlife and Coca-Cola for failing to uphold their animal welfare policies.

In July of 2024, an undercover ARM operative was hired by Rainbow Valley Dairy, working in a general labor position for three months and was able to record video daily for two and a half months. The operative's primary responsibilities included nighttime waste management and operating machinery. While the role limited direct involvement with dairy operations, the investigator covertly recorded widespread abuse and neglect during the three-month investigation. Key evidence was collected in birthing areas, milking parlors, calf housing units, and disposal fields, providing a comprehensive view of the facility's operations.

ARM demands immediate action to hold responsible parties accountable and ensure systemic reform in the dairy supply chain.

Background

Rainbow Valley Dairy is located in Buckeye, Arizona, approximately 20 minutes from Coca-Cola's fairlife plant in Goodyear, AZ. The dairy is part of the Dairymen of Arizona Cooperative, which supplies raw milk to the fairlife facility for processing and global distribution. The DeJong family, a prominent name in the U.S. dairy industry with operations in multiple states, owns the facility. The DeJong family has a long history of supplying milk to fairlife and other major dairy brands.

ARM has previously documented abuses at DeJong-owned dairies during the 2019 Operation Fair Oaks Farms, making this a recurring pattern of systemic cruelty within their operations. Despite past exposure and promises of reform, the findings at Rainbow Valley Dairy show continued disregard for animal welfare and ethical practices.

A disturbing pattern of criminal activity, animal cruelty, and environmental degradation was documented and detailed below. As such, ARM is calling for immediate actions:

1. Criminal Prosecution:

- Immediate arrests and prosecution of Rainbow Valley Dairy's owners, managers, and employees responsible for documented acts of cruelty.
- Legal action against Coca-Cola and fairlife executives for complicity in enabling systemic abuse through inadequate enforcement of animal welfare policies.

2. Permanent Closure: The Arizona Department of Agriculture, USDA, and FDA should revoke Rainbow Valley Dairy's license and permanently shut down its operations to prevent further violations.

3. Environmental Accountability: Federal, state, and local agencies should investigate and address environmental violations to mitigate harm to the local ecosystem and public health.

4. Policy Overhaul:

- Coca-Cola and fairlife must reassess their animal welfare policies, implement stricter enforcement measures, and increase transparency in their supply chain.
- Partner organizations should be required to undergo regular, independent audits conducted by third-party experts to ensure compliance with humane practices.

Evidence of animal cruelty, environmental degradation, and criminal activity were witnessed and documented throughout the length of the investigation.

Animal Cruelty

1. Poor Treatment of Calves

- Newborn calves are violently dragged away from their mothers, seconds after birth, using chains, ropes, and straps that caused dislocations and fractures. In several cases, the calves' legs and necks were broken during the process, leaving them to suffer without veterinary intervention.

- Workers frequently punched, kicked, whipped, and slammed calves onto concrete surfaces, often out of frustration or for expediency. These acts caused severe internal injuries, including broken ribs and possible punctured lungs.
- Calves are deprived of essential nutrition for prolonged periods, leading to malnutrition and weakened immune systems. When they were fed, workers employed oversized feeding tubes that caused internal trauma and, in some cases, fatalities.
- Male calves are being loaded onto transport vehicles in cruel and unsafe conditions, destined for resale and slaughter. Female calves are confined to 3x5 wooden crates with no room to move, stretch, or lie down comfortably. These enclosures led to chronic injuries, including bed sores, infections, broken bones, and muscle atrophy.

2. Poor Treatment of Dairy Cows

- Pregnant cows, unable to stand due to exhaustion or injury, are being dragged by machinery, hoisted with cables, or beaten with steel rods to force compliance. These actions resulted in broken bones, strangulation, and even death in several instances.
- Sick and injured cows are being left untreated for extended periods, leading to prolonged suffering and preventable deaths. Many were visibly emaciated, with open wounds infested with flies and other bugs.
- Workers routinely abused cows during milking procedures, including breaking tails, shocking them with electric prods, whipping, kicking punching, and stabbing them with sharp objects to elicit compliance.
- In some instances, cows were illegally killed by being shot in the neck with improperly calibrated firearms, causing prolonged suffering before death.

3. Overarching Neglect:

- Extreme heat exposure, with temperatures exceeding 135°F, caused heat stress, dehydration, and death among both cows and calves. The facility lacks adequate shade, ventilation, or access to clean water in certain area's.
- Unsanitary housing conditions contributed to the spread of possible diseases such as mastitis, respiratory infections, and sepsis. Calves and cows are often housed in dilapidated barns with hazardous flooring and exposed nails.
- Workers failed to monitor or address injuries, infections, and illnesses, allowing minor conditions to escalate and become life-threatening.

Environmental Violations

1. Illegal Waste Disposal:

- Large quantities of liquid animal waste were discharged directly into nearby wildlife areas without proper containment, contaminating, groundwater and nearby rivers. This pollution poses significant risks to both the environment and public health.

- The carcasses of cows and calves were disposed of illegally on and near adjacent recreational lands, where scavengers such as vultures and coyotes fed on the remains. This practice risks spreading infectious diseases, including zoonotic illnesses like H5N1.

2. Zoning and Building Code Violations: Structures on the property failed to meet basic safety standards, with poorly maintained barns, leaking waste pits, and unstable storage areas. These conditions endangered both animals and workers.

Substance Abuse

Employees were frequently observed consuming alcohol and using illicit drugs, including cocaine, during working hours while driving on public roads. This behavior further compromised the safety of animals and operations at the facility and the general public.

Broader Implications

The DeJong family, who also owns dairies in Indiana, California, Texas, and other states and has long-standing ties to fairlife and Fair Oaks Farms. ARM first investigated animal cruelty at dairies owned by the DeJong family as part of Operation Fair Oaks Farms in 2019, during which footage of abuse went viral and caused global calls for industry-wide reform within the dairy industry.

Despite Coca-Cola's $40 million investment in animal welfare reforms, including video monitoring, unannounced audits, and employee training, the investigation reveals the failure of these measures to prevent widespread abuse. Fairlife's public commitments to sourcing cruelty-free milk are contradicted by these findings, raising serious ethical and legal concerns about its supply chain oversight.

ARM remains committed to exposing systemic cruelty and advocating for the voiceless animals suffering in the dairy industry.
